Florida Class "D" and "G" security applicants must undergo a criminal background check prior to receiving a license to practice security. Here are some of the criminal history items which may disqualify applicants and keep them from getting a license.

If the applicant has committed a felony, or a crime which is punishable by more than one year in prison, he becomes generally disqualified for licensure. The applicant may still be approved if 10 years has gone by since his release from state supervision and his Civil Rights have been restored.

Applicants may experience a denial if they have a past history of arrest for crimes such as trespassing, robbery, theft, assault, resisting an officer and other offenses which are violent in nature; have demonstrated a disrespect for law; have outstanding bench warrants; or, are currently in a pretrial intervention or deferred prosecution program.

As they apply for licensure, applicants are advised to completely document all past arrest information and to provide a certified version of court dispositions.

Richard is a fantastic teacher. Very informative and takes time to answer all questions. I am from a construction background and am changing my career path as I retired. At first I was so nervous I didn't know whether to wind my butt or scratch my watch. Richard makes new comers feel at ease. The best coarse I've taken in a while. Thank you Richard.
